

North Carolina Social Studies K-12 Standard Course of Study Crosswalks

Kindergarten Social Studies Crosswalk

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

While the new Social Studies NCSCOS (2021) for Kindergarten have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may be arranged chronologically, thematically, or based on periodization. The five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of the big ideas and understandings of social studies. Social studies educators are tasked to remember that the events of history do not occur in a vacuum and that when social studies is taught, it should include teaching about the impact, influence, and implications of government, politics, geography, economics, and the behavioral sciences.

Grade 3 Social Studies Crosswalk

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

While the new Social Studies NCSCOS (2021) for Third Grade have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may be arranged chronologically, thematically, or based on periodization. The five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of the big ideas and understandings of social studies. Social studies educators are tasked to remember that the events of history do not occur in a vacuum and that when social studies is taught, it should include teaching about the impact, influence, and implications of government, politics, geography, economics, and the behavioral sciences.

Grade 6 Social Studies Crosswalk

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

While the new Social Studies NCSCOS (2021) for Sixth Grade have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may be arranged chronologically, thematically, or based on periodization. The five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of the big ideas and understandings of social studies. Social studies educators are tasked to remember that the events of history do not occur in a vacuum and that when social studies is taught, it should include teaching about the impact, influence, and implications of government, politics, geography, economics, and the behavioral sciences.

World History Social Studies Crosswalk

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the K-8 courses were organized around the five disciplinary strands of history, geography, economics, civics & government, and culture. In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the American History I and II and World History courses were written only to the disciplinary strand (lens) of History. These standards were written in a manner that asked students to study the connections government and politics, geography, economics, and culture had to the events of history. A key shift in the high school standards is that the courses, like K-8, have now been organized around the five major disciplinary strands of social studies. The intention of organizing the standards of ALL grades and courses in the K-12 scope and sequence around these five disciplinary strands is to provide for vertical articulation K-12, a comprehensive vertical progression K-12, and continuity within the entire K-12 continuum.

While the new Social Studies NCSCOS (2021) for American History and World History have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may still be arranged chronologically, thematically, or based on periodization. The five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of the big ideas and understandings of history. Social studies educators are tasked to remember that the events of history do not occur in a vacuum and that when history is taught, it should include teaching about the impact, influence, and implications of government, politics, geography, economics, and the behavioral sciences.

Founding Principles of the United States and North Carolina: Civics Literacy Crosswalk

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the K-8 courses were organized around the five disciplinary strands of history, geography, economics, civics & government, and culture. In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the American History Founding Principles, Civics and Economics course were written to focus on the strands (lenses) of Civics and Government, Personal Financial Literacy, and Economics. These standards were written in a manner that asked students to study the connections government, politics, personal finance, and economics have had on the development, application, and evolution of the founding principles, citizenship, governance, and civic participation in the American system of government. A key shift in the high school standards is that the courses, like K-8, have now been organized around the five disciplinary strands of history, civics and government, economics, geography, and behavioral sciences. The intention of organizing the standards of ALL grades and courses in the K-12 scope and sequence around these five disciplinary strands is to provide for K-12 vertical articulation, progression, and continuity within the entire K-12 continuum.

While the new Social Studies SCOS (2021) for the Founding Principles of the United States and North Carolina: Civic Literacy course have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may be arranged chronologically or thematically based on the content. In the Founding Principles of the United States and North Carolina: Civic Literacy course, the five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of how American democracy came to be; how shared political institutions emerged, have transformed, and currently operate; the place of the U.S. and N.C. in the world; and the ongoing debates and deliberative dialogue that characterize contemporary American civic life.

A crosswalk document is a reference tool educators and stakeholders can use to efficiently compare the changes to and differences between two sets of standards. This crosswalk document compares the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study (NCSCOS) to the 2010 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. This crosswalk can assist educators in the preliminary work required in assessing the differences and similarities in the scope, content, concepts, and skills. This crosswalk is intended to address questions about the nuances of the new standards versus the old standards. This crosswalk document is accompanied by additional instructional support documents for a deeper, more comprehensive understanding of the 2021 North Carolina Social Studies Standard Course of Study. Other documents include the Unpacking, Strand Maps, and Glossary, which provide support for curriculum development and instructional planning. Use this grade-level crosswalk to review and compare the two sets of standards, 2021 SCOS and 2010 SCOS, side-by-side.

In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the K-8 courses were organized around the five disciplinary strands of history, geography, economics, civics & government, and culture. In the previous Social Studies SCOS (2010), the standards for the American History I and II and World History courses were written only to the disciplinary strand (lens) of History. These standards were written in a manner that asked students to study the connections government and politics, geography, economics, and culture had to the events of history. A key shift in the high school standards is that the courses, like K-8, have now been organized around the five major disciplinary strands of social studies. The intention of organizing the standards of ALL grades and courses in the K-12 scope and sequence around these five disciplinary strands is to provide for vertical articulation K-12, a comprehensive vertical progression K-12, and continuity within the entire K-12 continuum.

While the new Social Studies Standards (2021) for American History and World History have been written to the five major disciplinary strands of social studies, classroom instruction may or may not be taught chronologically. Curriculum may still be arranged chronologically, thematically, or based on periodization. The five strands provide the disciplinary lenses teachers should use to facilitate a more intentional study of the big ideas and understandings of history. Social studies educators are tasked to remember that the events of history do not occur in a vacuum and that when history is taught, it should include teaching about the impact, influence, and implications of government, politics, geography, economics, and the behavioral sciences.
